Annie is an 11-year-old little girl diagnosed with Osteogenesis Imperfecta (OI) type III, commonly known as brittle bone disease, and dwarfism. This rare genetic disorder results in fragile bones that break easily, often from minimal or no trauma. OI is a lifelong condition caused by mutations in genes responsible for producing collagen, a vital protein for bone strength and structure. This genetic disorder severely compromises bone strength, making Annie susceptible to fractures from even minor movements or accidents. Due to her fragile bones, mobility is extremely limited and any unnecessary physical strain poses a serious risk of injury.
